

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

May 6, 2025

ACA Warns of Adverse Consequences from Proposed Tariffs on Inflight Catering

Brussels, BE – The Airline Catering Association (ACA) today expressed deep concern over the Trump administration’s recently proposed tariff measures targeting key supplies for the inflight catering industry. If enacted, these duties would force caterers to pass on significantly higher costs to airlines – further straining air transport at a time when both carriers and travelers are still recovering from pandemic-related challenges.

“Inflight catering is the unseen backbone of the passenger experience,” said Fabio Gamba, Managing Director of the ACA. “Tariffs on food ingredients, packaging materials and specialized equipment will undoubtedly drive up ticket fares and onboard service costs. This approach risks undermining consumer confidence in air travel, and lead to a reduction in bookings which in turn will jeopardize tens of thousands of catering jobs worldwide. The sheer announcement of these tariffs is already affecting some of our members, confronted as they are today to cancelled transborder routes, blocked access to key U.S.-based suppliers, and a shift toward more costly alternatives.”

If implemented, the proposed tariffs will have direct consequences on sectors that weren’t supposed to be impacted originally and will imply knock-on effects on the whole air transport sector.

- Escalating Supply Costs: Imported goods such as specialized aluminum trays, high-grade plastics and gourmet foodstuffs make up 40 percent of typical catering supply budgets. Tariffs of 10–25 percent would push these costs up by nearly $200 million industry-wide in the first year alone.
- Higher Fares and Fees: Airlines operate on razor-thin margins. Even a modest catering cost increase of just $1.50 per passenger can translate into a surcharge of up to $5 on ticket prices.
- Service Reductions & Job Losses: To absorb price shocks, some caterers will be forced to streamline menus, cut staff or consolidate kitchens – degrading onboard service and community employment.

“Rather than safeguarding American industry, these tariffs threaten to cripple one of the fastest-growing segments of our travel economy,” added Gamba. “We urge the administration to engage with stakeholders in a constructive dialogue before moving forward. Our doors are open – let us pursue smarter, targeted solutions that strengthen U.S. competitiveness without penalizing travelers or carriers.”

About the Airline Catering Association (ACA)

The Airline Catering Association is the leading trade organization representing the most influential inflight catering companies across the world. ACA members collectively employ 84,000 people and serve more than 1.4 billion passengers annually, providing nutritious meals, specialized dietary options, and world-class service that enhances the airline experience. Please visit: www.aca.catering

Media Contact:

Mercedes DIEGUEZ, Head of Communications

Phone: +32 479 79 21 36 - Email: mercedes.diequez@aca.catering

AIRLINE CATERING ASSOCIATION

Rue du Luxembourg 3 | 1000 Brussels, Belgium
T +32 (0)2 319 70 67 | www.aca.catering